Single choice

Currently the United States is a part of a free trade deal that includes the U.S., Canada, and Mexico. It was first negotiated and signed in 1994, with renegotiations over the years and a name change in 2018. Trump has talked about ending that deal and signing new, one-to-one trade deals with Canada and Mexico separately.

Some people say the United States should keep the current USMCA trade agreement with Canada and Mexico because it provides stability and clear rules for North American trade.

Others say the United States would be better off ending USMCA and negotiating separate trade deals with Canada and Mexico

Which view is closer to your own?

Keep the USMCA in place

End USMCA and negotiate two separate trade deals

Not sure/Can't say
